Spice 'n' Steam and dim sum

BY WILLIAM KENNEDY

John Li, founder of Spice 'n' Steam, Eugene's brand new dim sum-style restaurant, visits his native Guangdong (Canton) every few years. He says the southern Chinese province has changed a lot since his childhood, but more than anything, returning home shows him how much living in America changed him. Just opened in January, Spice 'n' Steam is Eugene's only authentic dim sum-style restaurant.

"In America, you have: problem, solution," Li says, picking two points on the table we're seated at in his downtown restaurant. Li, 25, draws a hard, straight line between the two points with his index finger, illustrating the Western approach to problem solving. He chooses two new points. "In China," he says, allowing his hand to meander on its journey from point A to point B, like a lazy goldfish in a brook.

Li says while he's not a commercial chef, he's "always had a passion for cooking," calling his decision to start Spice 'n' Steam "kind of like a brainstorm. What if I get into this business? What would I do?" Spice 'n' Steam serves dim sum every day until 6 pm, continuing after with a traditional Chinese dinner menu. Li says his concept blends authentic northern and southern Chinese cuisines alongside American sensibilities.

Dim sum is comprised of small plates, usually served with tea. Think a Chinese equivalent to brunch. Spice 'n' Steam features usual dim sum staples like dumplings and buns but also more exotic options for Western tastes, like chicken feet. Li explains the Chinese believe eating certain parts of an animal's body can aid your own health issues or injuries. For example, injured ankle? Eat chicken feet. And the best way to eat chicken feet, Li continues, is to pop the whole thing in your mouth, sucking off the tender saucy meat and spitting out the small bones, which, he says, add to the flavor.

Launching any restaurant is difficult, but Li found opening a dim sum place in Oregon posed its own unique challenge: finding chefs experienced in that style of cuisine. Li says traditionally dim sum chefs start as young as 14, and to staff Spice 'n' Steam he had to import chefs from places like Los Angeles and Denver as well as quality ingredients from Southern California. But Li is confident his venture will be a success in Eugene's growing Asian community. "When I see people eat the food, I'm happy," Li says.

Spice 'n' Steam is located at 165 W. 11th Avenue. It's open everyday 10 am to 10 pm. For more information check out Spice 'n' Steam on Facebook.

It survived colonial occupation, war, immigration and migration. Refugees helped spread it around the world. Today, Vietnamese beef noodle soup — called pho — is more popular than ever and has earned a global following, including in Eugene.

The word “pho” rhymes with “duh,” but that’s about the only thing people can agree on. No one really knows why it’s called pho. Although the soup’s origins remain obscure, it seems to be an innovation from the 1910s in Hanoi, Vietnam.

Some say the soup’s rice noodles, which give the dish its name, mean pho has Chinese origins. Others say that no one in Vietnam dreamed of eating cows until the arrival of French colonialists, whose expensive meals left behind beef scraps that needed to be utilized.

The original Hanoi version had only rice noodles and beef. Spices like clove, anise and cinnamon added later give it a complex taste that is savory, sweet and spicy.

But as the soup traveled, it changed. It spread to Saigon, where garnishes like basil, cilantro and chili sauce were introduced. By the time the soup reached the U.S., the variations had multiplied. Today, menus have everything from chicken pho to shrimp pho to vegetarian pho with tofu.

Collected here are six restaurants across Eugene, all of which offer pho for $10 or under.

As a food cart, Tam's Place Vietnamese Cuisine in south Eugene is the closest to pho's origins as street food. The pho there was the most savory: warm, hearty and very filling. Diners have the option of outdoor seating, a setting that somehow makes the pho all the more satisfying. Unlike other places in town, Tam's Place usually serves one kind of pho — beef pho — the single option being another similarity with the original Vietnamese eateries.

Bon Mi is the only pho in downtown Eugene, and that might be its biggest asset: the convenience. The menu offers a range of pho flavors, from chicken to beef and beyond, including one called “spicy noodle.” Bon Mi is a Vietnamese-French restaurant, so the menu features an array of French inspired items. The banh mi sandwiches, with their characteristic baguette and pickled vegetables, are delicious. And for those who can't decide between pho or a sandwich, the soup-sandwich combo is an excellent solution.

North Eugene's offering has the famous soup in its name — Pho The Good Times Asian Bistro — and its house special delivers just that: beef pho with brisket, eye of round and meatballs. From this basic starting point, the menu explores variations on this basic theme, from pork to seafood versions, adding up to a total of 14 pho varieties. While the house special sticks to the traditional formula of noodles and beef plus garnish, other items give the recipe a twist, like pho ga (chicken pho) with bok choy and sliced carrots.

It's not easy being two businesses at once, but west Eugene's Yi Shen is both a restaurant and an Asian grocery store, a feat it pulls off gracefully. The small dining area is quirky and cozy and is a perfect location for pho.

The pho is at the center of Yi Shen's no-nonsense menu, though it serves a variety of other dishes — Vietnamese, Chinese and more. The deluxe pho is clearly prepared with care, featuring hearty chunks of beef and finely sliced tripe.

The Vietnamese Restaurant, not far from Yi Shen, has almost no internet presence, but seems to have a word-of-mouth following and gets quite busy. Charred ginger and onion — traditional pho ingredients — are sometimes sighted in their large bowls of pho. The restaurant's interior is simple and unassuming, but the large crowds of international students on weekends suggest they are doing something right.

Saigon Café in west Eugene is one of the latest additions to Eugene's dining options, now open less than a year. It offers pho of various kinds, as well as several other southeast Asian-style soups, including Phnom Phenh noodle soup, a pho-like soup from Cambodia. The pho broth at Saigon Café was particularly impressive, clear and rich, with the pungent scent of star anise and clove.

The real controversy, of course, is which one is the best. Some say it is about the freshness of the ingredients. Some look to the broth, which should be clear yet flavorful. Others focus on customizing it with the exact amount of sriracha.

But maybe the search for the perfect pho, with the most authentic broth and the best spices, is beside the point. Instead, the real power of Vietnam's most famous soup is its accessibility, its adaptability and its ability to find fans in faraway places.

Chef Ibrahim Hamide recalls
nearly 50 years in Eugene

Eugene, Oregon, and Chef Ibrahim “Ib” Hamide, founder of Café Soriah on 13th Avenue, have been through a lot together: the tumultuous ’60s, the booming ’90s, the tense aftermath of 9/11 and, now, Donald Trump’s anti-immigration rhetoric.

A native Palestinian, Hamide grew up in Bethlehem, immigrating to Eugene in 1969 at the age of 18 to attend the University of Oregon. Recalling his early days in Eugene, Hamide says, “People smiled at me,” something he still feels is true about Eugene. “I will take that to my grave.”

Hamide launched Café Soriah more than two decades ago. He got into the restaurant business because he was missing the food of his home. “I wanted to eat it,” Hamide remembers. “I couldn’t find it.”

Soriah is now a culinary institution in Eugene: a destination for date nights, special occasions or late night cocktails — a grown-up local’s pick for good food and a sense of community.

Hamide recalls Soriah’s post-9/11 smoke-bomb attack, a dark spot on his time here in Eugene. Last year, Hamide told Flux, a magazine produced by the University of Oregon’s journalism school, that after the terror attacks of 9/11 he worked to be a “de facto spokesman for Palestine.”

Bricks were thrown through the windows of his restaurant twice and so was a smoke bomb. The family of a Café Soriah employee was threatened. But Hamide’s quick to add the outpouring of community support carried him through.

Today, Soriah’s menu offers a lunch, dinner and bar menu, focused on Hamide’s native Mediterranean cuisine. For a small plate, try curried beef kebab (beef tenderloin in onion, cilantro, ginger and curry powder, all topped with yogurt) or the baby trio (hummus, baba ghanoush and dolmas, served with pita).

Or for dinner, try prawns Jericho (tiger prawns sautéed with scallions, peppercorns, garlic, mushrooms and white wine). Hamide jokes he’s no longer “a spring chicken,” but he still serves chicken foostuck (pistachio-breaded chicken breast sautéed and finished with dijon tarragon cream sauce).

Soriah also offers a full bar, salads and plenty of vegetarian options.

“When I started, ‘hummus’ was not a household word by any stretch,” Hamide explains. “I was introducing my new adopted nation to the food that I grew up on to preach its attributes.”

“In third-world nations especially food carries a lot more meaning,” he adds. “It’s gathering, its social, it’s hospitable. Food is the centerpiece of social events.”

Hamide is proud to be part of Eugene’s quality food scene. “Eugene is no place to be ashamed of if you have an out-of-town guest.” Last year, Hamide had the opportunity to buy his building and expand his dining area.

This expansion is something Hamide hoped to do from the very beginning. During the warm months, Soriah’s seats guests in its romantic back-garden area. During cold weather, Hamide’s small and intimate dining area is packed to capacity.

“It’s been a godsend,” Hamide says, explaining he’s now able to accommodate more people in the space, painted in cool Mediterranean blues, during dinner rush, as well as host special events like weddings and corporate parties.

Over the years, Hamide learned that nothing bridges a cultural divide like food, calling it a common denominator. “They say, ‘Get them through the stomach,’” he explains, adding nothing is more personal than prepping and serving someone a meal. “People put it into their mouths, into their systems. That’s pretty special.”

Hamide continues: “People are entrusted to put something on a plate they’re going to take into their system. You better take that assignment with the most respectful awe. When the locals are introduced to somebody else’s food and like it, people feel the culture.”

He adds, “It’s a real understatement and a cliché, but the best way to get to know other cultures is through their food, through their language, through their art: ambassadors to their culture.”

Café Soriah is at 384 W. 13th Avenue. It’s open every day from 5 pm to 10 pm. For more information and a full menu go to cafesoriah.com.

Willie's International dishes up home style Lebanese cooking

WALID 'WILLIE' SALEEBY

EUGENEWEEKLY.COM/CHOW

He came to the U.S. with $300 in his pocket and a partial scholarship to the University of Oregon. Now, after 48 years in Eugene and a string of restaurants to his name, he has finally started a place that serves the food of his home country, Lebanon.

Walid "Willie" Saleeby opened Willie's Lebanese and Northwest Cuisine in 2013 in Springfield, dishing up Lebanese classics like shish tawook (chicken kebab) and kafta (meatball).

"This is all the way my mother and grandmother used to do it," Saleeby says, then jerks a thumb over his shoulder towards the kitchen. "There's no recipe back there for that."

"People get shown how to do it," adds restaurant manager Moses Kimball. "That's what makes the difference. Literally, Lebanese food is love, it really is."

The mazza plate for two, including baba ghanoush hummus and falafel, provides a great overview of what Lebanese food has to offer. Fresh focaccia bread tops it all off. Ingredients are locally sourced whenever possible and the menu remains small to ensure everything stays fresh.

Saleeby decided to keep some items from his previous restaurant, Willie's on Seventh Avenue, to maintain a bit of continuity. "Now people come in and order more and more Lebanese food," he says. Prices are around $10 for appetizers and $20 and up for entrees.

But Saleeby didn't immigrate to the U.S. to open restaurants. Originally, he came because he didn't have a choice. "When your back is to the wall, you don't have many options," he recalls.

In the 1960s, as Saleeby finished high school in Beirut, the shortage of space in Lebanon's colleges and universities became a crisis. To buy time, authorities implemented a new required exam and intentionally designed it to be too difficult to pass. Across Lebanon, he says almost everyone failed that year.

Effectively barred from higher education, Saleeby and his classmates went abroad for college to France, Germany, Australia and the U.S. That's how he became a UO student in Eugene.

His first job in Eugene was in food service — the UO's dorm cafeteria, to be exact. A friend told him if he offered to work the breakfast shift, he could get a job easily. "I worked every frickin' breakfast shift for a whole year," he says.

The next year Saleeby was hired at the Eugene Hotel, back when it had a five-star restaurant. It was like a miniature United Nations, he recalls. "We had people from everywhere working there, from France, Germany, from Lebanon, from Palestine, from Chile, from Guatemala," Saleeby says. "It was interesting because we had so many different languages. And they were all students."

Ib Hamide of Café Soriah was among those who worked there at the time. After graduation, Saleeby went on to manage and own various Eugene-area restaurants, including Terrace Café.

"It wasn't the easiest decision, to leave," Saleeby says, remembering his departure from Lebanon almost 50 years ago. "You do whatever you need to, if you want to advance in life, if you want to have a future."

Willie's Lebanese and Northwest Cuisine is at 400 International Way in Springfield near the Symantec campus. Lunch hours are 11:30 am to 2 pm Monday through Friday. Dinner hours are 5 pm to 9 pm Monday through Saturday. Closed Sunday.

THE REAL DEAL

Nourishing Traditions at Tortilleria el Matate

BY VANESSA SALVIA

On a recent mid-week afternoon, the dozen people who drove up to Tortilleria el Matate's storefront along Main Street in Springfield were greeted with a sign on the door stating: "No hay tortillas." No tortillas today.

"We ran out," says Elda Galvan, the daughter of Nelly and Agustin Galvan, the store's owners. Plank Town Brewing Co. nearby and other local restaurants placed a large order that morning, and the Galvans didn't have enough fresh handmade flour and corn tortillas to spare.

Agustin Galvan, from Guadalajara, is 78, and Nelly Galvan, from Mexicali, is 74. They "retired" about 15 years ago, after closing their tortilleria in New Mexico and moving to Southern California to be near Elda and another daughter. It was there, about 12 years ago, that they heard about a movement of Hispanics and Latinos to the Pacific Northwest.

"My dad still had the tortilla machine, so we thought this would be a good place to open our tortilla bakery again," Elda Galvan says. The three visited towns from Yakima to Springfield and liked Springfield the best. They opened Tortilleria el Matate in 2004.

The Galvans make up to 200 kilos (441 pounds) of corn tortillas a day, and Nelly uses her family's generations-old recipe to make about 25-dozen flour tortillas each week.

They also sell Mexican cheeses such as queso botanero, with cilantro and jalapenos, and requeson, like ricotta. Tubs of fresh, handmade salsa in both red and green varieties are available for only $2.50 for 8 ounces or $4 for 16 ounces. Here you will also find bags of dried New Mexico chili peppers and cornhusks for tamales.

In the Latino community, it's common for each person to eat one or two tortillas with every meal — breakfast, lunch and dinner. Elda says that if they run out, their customers would rather do without tortillas than buy from a grocery store.

Agustin demonstrates that his tortillas aren't like store-bought varieties by squeezing one in his strong hand and then opening his fist. "It's still good," he says with pride. His tortilla springs back into its round shape, whereas a store-bought tortilla would simply break and crumble.

"We've been fortunate to be welcomed by the Latino community," Elda Galvan says. "It took a while for the Anglo customers to learn what fresh tortillas are all about, but now we have regulars who come in every week."

Even people who live here and visit Mexico take the Galvan's tortillas back home with them. Nelly Galvan begins writing down a list of a dozen countries around the world, from Canada to Latvia, where people have taken her tortillas home. "That makes me proud," Nelly Galvan says with a beaming smile.

"People love our tortillas because we don't use any preservatives," Elda Galvan says. "What you taste is corn. It's a perfect marriage because it's a Mexican machine and raw ingredients from the U.S. The ingredients here are even better than what we can get at home in Mexico, so people tell us that we have the best tortillas. Even better than what they would get back home."

Tortilleria el Matate is at 1124 Main Street in Springfield. Call ahead to order tortillas for events such as weddings or quinceañeras, or just to make sure they haven't run out. 541-747-8384.

OKON UDOSENATA,
ROASTER AND OWNER,
EQUIANO COFFEE CO.

BREWED WITH LOVE

Equiano Coffee Co. brews
something special BY ANNA GRACE

The Equiano tasting room is tiny, calm and slow. I enter and am embraced with the redolence of expertly roasted coffee. Two older gentlemen sit in a corner, nailing down the answers to life's mysteries over espresso. Dave Harney, having driven across town from his auto body shop, waits expectantly for a couple of Americanos, a latte and a half-pound of beans.

"I love this coffee," he says simply.

Regular patrons satisfied, roaster and owner Okon Udosenata makes me a cappuccino, moving with scientific precision and talking easily about the family, experience and love that have made Equiano a cult favorite throughout the Pacific Northwest.

Artisan and Accessible

The goal of Equiano is to bring specialty coffee to the people. The company strives for simplicity with style, hoping to make specialty coffee approachable for its patrons.

"Specialty coffee is not the most approachable idea," Udosenata says. "We want people to feel comfortable, and offer them a unique coffee experience."

This approach seems to work for Harney. "I'm a big fan of quality coffee," he says. "I was super stoked to find that Equiano sets the bar with their nuanced roasts, quality shot pulls and drink crafting, as well as their consistent and friendly service. I like the stripped-down, non-commercialized, artisan approach that focuses on quality."

But beyond coffee aficionados like Harney, even the least experienced coffee customers begin to learn over time. "That is my aim with Equiano tasting room," Udosenata says. "For customers to pick up some tips on how to brew coffee at home and to hopefully become excited about the process or ceremony of making coffee."

Udosenata finishes making my cappuccino and sets the tiny cup in front of me. I take a sip. It is amazing. I take another sip. I start to feel amazing.

Colombian Connections

Last year, Udosenata traveled to Colombia to meet with small farmers in pursuit of the single-source bean. "The small farms that I buy from do not blend their varietals, and this will give you a unique flavor," he says, noting that the coffee varietals that produce a lot of fruit often will lack in flavor.

So that explains bad hotel coffee once and for all.

Another trick that large roasters pull is to "blend a high-producing coffee varietal with one that has an amazing flavor that is not a high producer of fruit," and thus Udosenata explains why mass market coffee is ... fine.

Udosenata hopes to find the best unadulterated fruit with unique flavor to serve his customers. The trip to Colombia was a huge success. "There were so many cool things I was exposed to," Udosenata says, relating stories of bulbous beans, knowledgeable farmers and the beauty of coffee culture in Colombia.

Udosenata is now working with four small farmers in Colombia. "At my retail location I offer coffees from a farm that I visited called Manantales Del Frontino. I carry three different varietals from this farm. A varietal called Red Bourbon (it tastes like milk chocolate, pomegranate, and raspberries), a Maragogipe varietal and a Geisha varietal," he says.

My cappuccino gone, Udosenata places an adorable cup of the Red Bourbon in front of me. It really does taste like chocolate, pomegranate and raspberries, but also like the best coffee you've ever had. I begin to dismiss all ideas I've ever had about drinking too much coffee at one time.

It strikes me as Udosenata speaks about the farmers and beans in Colombia that he sees himself not only as a roaster and barista but as an agent of taste. He has the skills and knowledge to match up the coffee of growers he knows personally with specific customers.

Coffee Family

Equiano is a family business, and coffee runs deep in their veins. Udosenata says: "My ethnic heritage is Ibibio from Nigeria on my father's side and Mexican on my mother's side ... growing up in Eugene with two older sisters and a younger brother, I was the designated coffee maker for my mother at a very young age."

Coffee-making skills sparked Udosenata's career as a barista. He and his wife, Gloria Udosenata, began home roasting years ago. Their interest translated into a roasting business and now, this tasting room.

Choosing the beans is only the first step. The Udosenata family then roasts them at the Equiano facility on Wallis Street, deep in west Eugene. The entire industrial block smells incredible.

As a roaster, Okon Udosenata has competed on the national level. "Going to the national competition was an eye opener," Udosenata says. "To see what everyone was doing on a national level gave me a better idea of how I would define my style and ... develop my brand."

Last year he took sixth at the U.S. Coffee Championships and plans to return next year. "My aim is to have fun with it," he says.

The next generation, Okon and Gloria's two boys, have grown up in coffee shops.

"Do your boys drink coffee?" I ask. "Chocolate," he says.

Love Breeds Love

The charm of Equiano moves past the roasted and prepared coffee so thoughtfully chosen. It is a quiet little shop, with most of its seating outside. Glass jars serve as take-away cups. A vintage turntable plays an album from the eclectic collection leaning up against the wall beside a grinder.

Udosenata and I are finishing our discussion, along with several coffees. I am beginning to think I can actually fly when the door opens and a woman bounces in, breathless.

"You're here!" she says, beaming at Udosenata. Her name is Heidi McBride, and she proceeds to gush on about how she has been out of the state and returned to find out her beloved Equiano beans now had their own tasting room.

What is it about this coffee that inspires this reaction?

"There's just something about Okon's coffee," McBride says, pausing thoughtfully before adding, "You can just tell it's been roasted with love."

Equiano Coffee, 300 Blair Blvd, is open daily 8:30 am to 4 pm. Closed Sunday.

UPTOWN ASIAN GROCERY

I ask Genebee Fillon, owner of Uptown Asian Grocery on Main Street in Springfield, and her best friend and employee Jenivy Mattes if it's true that the most expensive fish sauce is the best fish sauce. "Yes!" they both say at once, without hesitation.

Fish sauce, made from salted, fermented fish, is very common in Asian cuisines but can also be an intimidating ingredient. Its funky taste and smell add umami richness that is hard to replicate without it. Typical grocery store fish sauce doesn't have much smell, is usually in a small bottle and costs about $3.

Real Asian fish sauce, however, is in a much bigger bottle, and may be either dark and oily or lighter and cloudy (more like a thin fish paste). Still, the cost for the good stuff is only about $10.

"Every Asian culture has their favorite fish sauce," Fillon says. "We carry six different varieties." Some sauces are popular with Vietnamese, Thai or Cambodians. Fillon and Mattes are from the second largest Philippine island, Mindanao, and their preferred variety is Red Boat.

"It's really good," Mattes says. "It's kind of like extra virgin olive oil. It's made from the first pressing of the fish." And it gets used in every dish, from sauces to soups or mixed with spicy coconut vinegar for a dressing.

If you find a brand where the cloudy bottom layer has separated from the oil on top, you can mix it together with a good shake, or just use the top layer. Mixing it will give you a much fishier smell and flavor.

If the jar is cloudy all the way through, it's meant to be used that way. When using one of the richer fish sauces such as Red Boat, reduce the salt in the rest of your dish. — Vanessa Salvia
